"The Christian Conscience" was the theme at the Makawao Union Church last Sunday morning. The Rev. A. Craig Bowdish showed how Jesus had quickened man's moral sense and judgment until the old Leathen world has been brought to the present keen desire for a purer juster civilization. Generations of civilization. Generations men and women have been more and more alert to the noble ideals and ambitions of life. Through the love of God and grace of Jesus Christ they have purified the friendships of life recognized the value of the spirit and realized that they are workers to-gether with God. There is definite proof for this in the Christian home of today. There are communities where terrible vices of the Roman world. There is the insistent demand that the soldier and sailor may have fair chance to remain a man of clean habits and high physical efficiency. There is such a practical insistence that millions of dollars are freely given to vitalize the purity and justice of Jesus Christ in the world of

Motherhood, And The Home

With motherhood and the home as the theme of his sermon last Sunday morning, at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rev. J. Charles after dwelling on the home environ-ment of Jesus, in Nazareth—a place that was a perpetual temptation to wrong thought and wrong doing, said: I am led to press motherhood and the home as a centre of a true environment, because we are living in an age when much is being said and written in disparagement of motherhood and of the home. Even in the name of religion, and morality, suggestions are being made in one quarter and another, which, if put in-to practice, will militate against the best in motherhood and the best in the home, and, ultimately, undermine and destroy society, itself.

For years, the ultra-socialists of our own country, and of others, have been advocating the abolition of marriage; of the home; and, of the family. For marriage they would substitute "free love." Instead of the home and the family life for children, they would have children rear-ed in public institutions, at the ex-pense of state. When men advocate such things they show a misconception of things fundamental to the social fabric. In saying this I have in mind not only what is being suggested, and, put into practice, as a public policy, in Germany, but, also, those revolutions in domestic life, scarcely one whit behind the policy advocated in Germany, which men who regard themselves as social lead-ers, and educationists, in America and England, advocate, because they regard marriage, the home family as stumbling blocks in a progressive civilization. Their theories are a blight on right thinking and right doing.

I know of no clergyman who holds these theories, but I know of some who think that the "old fashioned home" has gone forever, and who say that the fact is to be regretted, but only with sentimental, and emotional regret. If the old fashioned home, which, to my way of thinking, is the true home, the home of mutual, unselfish, sacrifice and service, with which is bound up the very best ideals of human life, and inspiration for altruistic service; if the kind of home has gone, or is going, then civilization, and society is in the process of dis-intergration, and humanity is slowly sinking back into barbarism, or worse condition.

Napolean, of France, we are told, said, many years ago, that France's greatest need was a nation of mothers. I presume he meant mothers who know how to rightly bring up and train their children; for motherhood means more than bringing children into the world. It means the training of the child religiously, morally, and in all such ways as to fit it for those relations in which it is to live, and move, and have its being,

Perhaps Napolean had in when he spoke of the spirit of "Race Sulcide" which had, even in his day, its grip upon the French nation. A French writer has recently said that but for the deadly grip of "Race Suicide" on the French nation, for the past half cen-tury, France would not, at the present hour, be struggling, against Germany, for her existence. To quote his words: "As late as 1850, the population of France surpassed that of Germany. When the war broke out it had become inferior by 27 millions. "It was", he says "to this fact the war was really due. If the Germans had had before them 60 millions of French instead of 39, they would have healtated long."

Be that as it may, the condition into which the French nation had come, before the war, in this respect nation should was one which no covet. And, yet, on the plea that "quality justifies it" much of the best native American and English life seems likely to fall victim to it.

Society, and, indeed, civilization, as a whole has many problems before it to solve. The solution to them, how-ever, is to be found in any theory which tempers with marriage, the home, or family life. These bring meral influences into play which, we they non-existent, would be wanting.
